New Challenges of Global Governance (UOC, IBEI)

Globalization, technological changes and the irruption of emerging powers are reconfiguring world politics and rapidly transforming our societies. This program is designed to give participants a clear understanding of the challenges of global governance.

Objectives and Competences

The goal of this program is to introduce participants into the challenges of world governance, to make them aware of the multiple dimensions existing in the International arena, to make them easier to understand the challenges at economic and political level considering the geopolitical context and the policy processes involved

- Identify data sources and conduct rigorous bibliographic and documentary searches.
- Argue and establish, based on data and theory, plausible explanations about international phenomena and establish ways to validate or refute them.
- Prepare the presentation of reports and/or intervention proposals.
- Use English both to receive and to communicate information, analysis and proposals

Aimed to

This is a program aimed at graduate students with degrees in social sciences (Political Science, Sociology, Economics, Business and Administration, Social Sciences), other degrees, and non-graduate students interested in international policy issues and sensitized by the problems of the current world. The subjects of the course will have the master degree level, but non-graduate students will be accepted provided they have a minimum level to follow the program.

Profiles

The profile of participants is broad: on the one hand, graduate students with an interest in International studies and geopolitical issues, on the other hand, professionals and interested audiences that required a better understanding of current international decision-making processes.

Academic Management

Ana Sofía Cardenal

Associated Professor of Political Science at the Universitat Oberta de Catalunya and Associated Professor at the Pompeu Fabra University, where she teaches a course in Comparative Politics. She has been visitor researcher at the Centre of Latin American Studies of the Stanford University and Fulbright Fellow in the Politics Department at the New York University (NYU).

Jacint Jordana

Professor of Political Science and Public Administration at the Pompeu Fabra University. He holds a PhD in Economy (University of Barcelona, 1992).
